New Citation Guidelines

Alongside with the redesign of the journal's webpage and the title of the journal's printed version, CEJISS has started to use a new citation style. By doing so, CEJISS transitions to the Harvard style of citations.

- CEJISS follows the 'your paper, your way' principle. Hence, the Journal does not request any specific citation or formatting style until after a paper has been accepted for publication. However, the citation and formatting style needs to be clear and consistent. It is up to the author to change the citation style according to the journal's requirements once the manuscript is accepted.
- For more details, please see <https://www.cejiss.org/guidelines>
- Templates for citation managers (Endnote, Zotero, Mendeley and others) are available as well (please check the aforementioned link).

The first issue of 2022 will follow the new guidelines and the authors interested in publishing their papers in CEJISS should not use the old citation style any longer.
